Kentuckians Want and Trust Physician-Led Care

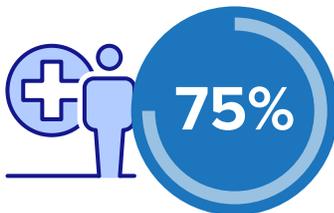

A December 2022 statewide survey conducted for the Kentucky Medical Association by an independent polling organization found that Kentucky patients overwhelmingly trust and want physician-led, team-based care.

of Kentuckians say physician involvement in medical procedures and surgeries is very important.

of Kentuckians say physician involvement in their treatment and diagnosis decisions is very important.

of Kentucky's rural voters oppose non-physician providers performing certain medical services and procedures.

of Kentuckians say that expanded scope of practice would make procedures less safe.

When people trust the qualifications, experience and expertise of the providers delivering their care and feel safe in the care setting, they are more likely to follow their physicians' recommendations and stick to their treatment plans.
